

May 19, 2010

For Immediate Release

Where Do Boats Go if the Oil Comes?

Jupiter, FL – While it remains a game of “wait and see” concerning the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico, one Florida-based marina group is giving boaters the ability to protect their vessels before it’s too late.

Loggerhead® Club & Marina is offering boaters a chance to get their vessels out of the water and into dry storage safely and quickly, without signing a lease.

This oil slick poses a significant threat to any boats left at a wet dock. Oil can permanently stain the white gel coat of a boat’s hull. It can also cause problems if the oil is sucked into a boat’s operating system. Insurance companies are now recommending that boaters remove their boats from any water that could be affected by the spill. As Florida severely lacks adequate dry storage space to handle a mass influx of vessels, Loggerhead Club & Marina is offering boaters a plan of action now.

Given the extraordinary circumstances of this spill, Loggerhead is offering boaters the option to reserve a space to dry dock their vessels. Boaters will pay a reservation fee of $500 to guarantee dry dockage in case it is needed. Boaters will then have the availability for six months to then dry dock their vessels at the current rate.

Loggerhead Club & Marina has the following locations across the state: Aventura, Daytona Beach, Hollywood, Jupiter, Lake Okeechobee, Lantana, Miami, Palm Beach Gardens, Riviera Beach, South Lantana, St. Petersburg, and Vero Beach.

For media inquiries, contact Jamie Holmes at 561.201.4495.

The Loggerhead® Club & Marina brand is owned by Seven Kings, Holdings, Inc., which is headquartered in Jupiter, Florida, and is a premier marina and development company of independently owned and operated South Florida luxury marinas, serving the Southwest Florida boating and East Coast Florida marina industry.